Honoring our Parents

We turn from the first three commandments, regarding relationships between God and humans, towards the next four, which focus on relationships among people.

What nugget of wisdom does the Fourth Commandment teach us? Today some parents and children are estranged; other wish their parents were alive to honor them. But the following story shows how delightfully some children still honor their parents.

Jan celebrated her 60th birthday with friends, far from her children who live in five different states. But she told her kids, "No gifts. All I need are memories of you." Then the postal service delivered a special box within it were 60 small pieces of paper, on which Jan's children had written 60 special memories. She read and cherished each on with a mixture of laughter and tears.

While we can only speculate what motivated Jan's children, we can ask ourselves: Why honor our parents? In the world of the Bible and in the best homes today, parents provide the images of trust, hope and serenity that enable the young to face

Gospel: John 10:27-30

"The works that I do testify to me." Jesus walked the talk. He was a shepherd who "knew his sheep and they followed him." Mother's Day gives us the opportunity to celebrate the unconditional love of mothers. Whether living or dead, a mothers' love always invites us to follow her example by loving generously and selflessly.

formidable obstacles ahead. To their children they convey the message, whether spoken or unspoken, "You are loved. You are wonderful."

All human beings are constantly making the passage from the known to the unknown. Parents who have endured disappointment, even tragedy, can help their children travel that passage with dignity. "We've made mistakes," they say. "We've lost jobs, or health or our dearest loves. But it didn't kill us. Something in human beings endures. Something continues to trust. Something moves forward in confidence."
